THE RESTLESS FOUNDER / FREE TEMPLATE

The Create First Morning

A morning template that puts making before scrolling, so consistency stops depending on remembering.

Create, then consume. In that order.

One rule, and why it needs a system.

Create before you consume. It is a simple rule, and it can be the difference between a creator who posts and one who intends to.

The trouble with an ADHD brain is that a rule only works on the days you remember it. Scrolling gives quick reward for almost no effort, so it can win the first ten minutes of the day before you have decided anything. A rule needs help. It needs a setup that makes creating the easiest first move and consuming the second.

The rule alone

Works while you remember it. Breaks on a rushed morning.

The rule in a system

The setup is ready the night before, so creating takes almost no decisions.

Rule of the template: the first thing you touch is the thing you make.

Set up the morning at night.

Two minutes in the evening, so the morning needs no thinking.

1 Choose tomorrow's one thing. One idea from your list. Write it as a single line.

2 Get the outline ready. Paste the idea into AI with the prompt below. Leave the outline open on your screen.

3 Put the phone out of reach. Across the room, on charge, face down. The first thing in your hand should be the thing you make with.

4 Leave the camera or mic ready. If setting up takes more than a minute, it will not happen.

NIGHT BEFORE PROMPT

Tomorrow's idea is: [one line]. Write a spoken outline I can read in the morning: a first line that opens with the problem, three short points and a closing line. Plain spoken English, under 60 seconds.
Keep it simple enough that I can say it half awake.

The first twenty minutes.

00 TO 05	Water, light, no screens. Do the basics. Do not open any feed, any news or any messages.
05 TO 15	Make the thing. Read the outline once and record it in one or two takes. Or write it, if writing is your format. Done is the target.
15 TO 20	Hand it off. Send it to your queue or to AI for the caption. Do not edit it yet.
20 ONWARDS	Now you may consume. Scroll, read, listen. You have earned it and you have already made today's work.

Twenty minutes. That is the whole commitment.

Bad morning? Make a one-sentence post and move on. A small thing made counts for more than a big thing planned.

Consume later, on purpose.

You do need information to have ideas. You just do not need it first thing. Give it a window and a job.

1. Pick a window. Thirty minutes in the afternoon is plenty. Set a timer when you start.

2. Carry a capture note. Whenever something sparks an idea, write one line in the Ideas note. Do not follow it down the rabbit hole.

3. End with a pick. When the timer rings, choose the best idea you captured and put it in tomorrow's slot.

PROMPT: IDEAS TO A PICK

Here are the ideas I captured today: [paste]. Pick the one that is most useful to someone just starting out in my field and that I can say in under 60 seconds. Tell me why in one sentence and write the first line.

The cycle: consume in the afternoon, bring the idea into tomorrow morning, create first. Repeat.

The weekly check.

Five minutes on Sunday. Copy this into a note and tick it off.

```
Mon [ ] Tue [ ] Wed [ ] Thu [ ] Fri [ ] Sat [ ] Sun [ ]
Made before consuming: ___ of 7
Phone out of reach the night before: ___ of 7
Biggest thing that got in the way: ______
One change for next week: ______

If you miss a day

1 Do not make up for it. Tomorrow starts clean with a normal set-up.

2 Do change one thing. Look at the biggest obstacle and move it out of the way before tomorrow.

Not medical advice. This is a working habit method that sits alongside whatever support you already use. Make it yours.

A good rule is one that still works when you forget it.
