THE RESTLESS FOUNDER / FREE GUIDE

The Gentle Day

An AI setup that holds the reminders, so a hard day does not have to rest on willpower.

For the days you know exactly what matters and still cannot begin.

Struggling to start is not a verdict on you.

Many of us with ADHD love our faith, our family and our work, and still find that the simple, repeated things are the hardest to start.

It is easy to read that as a character problem. Often it is a memory and starting problem: too many things held in the head, too many small decisions, and a day with no soft edges. Willpower is the most expensive tool you own, and it is the one most days ask you to use.

Pressure

Hold everything in your head. Rely on feeling ready. Add guilt when it does not work.

Support

Put the reminders somewhere else. Shrink the first step. Let the day have a floor you can always reach.

This guide builds the support. It uses AI to carry the remembering and the sorting, so your energy goes to the things that actually matter to you.

The aim is a kinder day, not a perfect one.

Build the day around fixed points.

Open-ended time is hard. A day with a few fixed anchors is easier, because each anchor tells you what comes next.

1 List the fixed points you already have. Meals, school runs, work calls, and for many of us the prayer times, if you pray. You are not adding anything, only noticing what is already there.

2 Attach one small task to each anchor. After the morning meal, the first email. After the midday break, ten minutes on the main task. The anchor is the trigger, so you do not need a memory.

3 Ask AI to draw the day. Paste your anchors into the prompt below and let it hand back the shape.

1 THE ANCHOR MAP

```
I have ADHD and I do better with fixed points than with open time.
These are my fixed points today: (list them). These are the tasks I want to get done: (list them). Attach each task to the nearest fixed point so that no part of the day is open-ended. Keep each task to one line starting with a verb. Do not add anything I did not give you.
```

Why it works: nothing depends on remembering. The day carries you from one point to the next.

Let AI carry the reminders.

Anything you are afraid of forgetting should live outside your head within a minute of arriving.

| | |
|---|---|
| 01 CATCH | Say it the moment you think it. Voice note, dictation, anything. Do not tidy it. Paste or send it into one place. |
| 02 SORT | Let AI sort it. Once a day, hand it the pile and ask for three groups: today, this week, not now. |
| 03 REMIND | Turn the sorted list into reminders. Ask for them worded as gently as you would speak to a friend, then set them in your phone. |

2 CATCH AND SORT

```
Here is everything in my head, unfiltered: (talk or paste it). Sort it into Today, This week and Not now. Keep Today to a maximum of three items. For each item, write the first step in one sentence that takes five minutes or less. Write any reminders in a warm, calm tone, with no pressure and no blame.
```

Set a minimum day, in advance.

On the heavy days, you do not need a plan. You need a floor: the smallest version of a good day, decided when you are well.

Write your minimum day while you feel clear. Three to five things, small enough that you could do them on your worst day. When the heavy day comes, you do not decide anything. You open the list.

3 THE MINIMUM DAY

```
Help me write my minimum day, the smallest version of a good day that I can do even when I am low on energy. Ask me, one at a time, what matters most to me in these areas: faith if I practise, family, health, work, home. Then write a list of five things, each taking ten minutes or less, that would let me say the day was held. Keep the tone kind.
```

4 THE HEAVY DAY

```
Today is a heavy day. Here is my minimum day list: (paste it). Here is what is waiting on me: (paste it). Tell me the one thing from the list to start with, give me the first step in one sentence, and move everything else to tomorrow. Do not lecture me.
```

If low days are lasting or feel dangerous, please talk to a doctor or someone you trust. This guide is a daily-life tool, not treatment.

Three steps, in order.

1 Tonight, five minutes: run prompt 3 and write your minimum day. Put it in your phone notes.

2 Tomorrow morning: list your fixed points and run prompt 1. Only attach tasks to the anchors you already have.

3 Every evening: run prompt 2 on whatever is still in your head, and let the list be where it lives overnight.

5 THE EVENING CLOSE

```
Here is what happened today, including what I did not get to: (talk or paste it). Do not judge it. Tell me one thing that went well, move anything unfinished to the right day, and write me one calm line to read tomorrow morning.
```

You are not a bad Muslim, a bad parent or a bad worker for finding the simple things hard. You are someone whose day needed more support than it was given. Now it has some.

A working routine to adapt, not medical or religious advice. For questions about worship and what is asked of you, speak to a knowledgeable scholar.

Mercy first, then method.