Say It Out Loud

A short guide to saying your big goal on camera, in public, on a routine that does not need courage every day.

Dream so big it embarrasses you. Then say it anyway.

A goal you only think is a goal you can quietly shrink.

Inside your head, a big dream gets negotiated down a little every week. Out loud and on record, it stays the size you said it.

Most of the voices that tell you to be realistic are not yours. They were picked up from people who had good reasons to play it safe. Saying the goal in public is the simplest way to hear your own voice louder than theirs.

The barrier

It feels embarrassing, so you wait until you are braver. That day does not arrive by itself.

The way round

Remove the decision. Make saying it a routine, on a day and at a time, so bravery is not required.

Embarrassment is a good sign that the goal is big enough.

Write it down. Then double it.

Do this once, with a timer, before you open the camera.

1 Write your goal for the next twelve months in one plain sentence. Include a number if there is one.

2 Say it out loud once, alone. Notice which word you want to soften.

3 Double it. Double the number, the reach or the size of the thing. Write that sentence underneath.

THE HONEST CHECK

This is my goal for the next twelve months: [paste]. And this is the doubled version: [paste]. Tell me which words in each sentence sound like they came from fear of what other people will think, rather than from what I actually want. Do not rewrite the goal. Only point at the words.

THE VOICE AUDIT

Here are the things I tell myself about why this is unrealistic:
[paste]. For each one, tell me whose voice it sounds like (a parent, a former boss, a friend, the news) and whether there is any real evidence behind it. Be direct and kind.

Thirty seconds, four lines.

You do not need a clever post. You need a plain one that you can say five times in a row without wincing.

LINE 1	The goal. "In twelve months I will [doubled goal]."
LINE 2	The reason. "I want this because [one honest sentence]."
LINE 3	The step. "This week I am [one thing you can finish in seven days]."
LINE 4	The invitation. "If you are building something big, say it in the comments."

WRITE MY FOUR LINES

Here is my doubled goal, my reason and this week's step: [paste].
Write the four line script above in my voice, plain spoken English, under 70 words in total. No hype words. Give me two versions: one calm, one fired up.

Make it a system, not a mood.

The goal gets said on a schedule, whether or not you feel brave that day.

SUNDAY	Ten minutes: update the weekly step, run the four line prompt, pick your take.
MONDAY	Record the take, once, phone propped up. Do not watch it back. Post it.
THURSDAY	One short update: what moved this week, in two sentences.
MONTHLY	Look back at the month. Is the doubled goal still too small? Double it again.

Three rules

1. Record once. No second take unless the first one was unusable.
2. Post before you have time to talk yourself out of it.
3. Never delete a post because it felt embarrassing. That feeling is the point.

Three things, in order.

1 Today: write the goal, double it, run the honest check.

2 Tomorrow: run the four line prompt, pick a version and record it once.

3 This week: put the Sunday and Monday slots in your calendar and keep them.

You already know what you are capable of. This is just a way of saying it louder than the voices that were never yours.

A working routine to adapt: change the words until they sound like you. Not financial or career advice.

Believe it louder than the people who settled.
