The Deliberate Business Checklist

Build a business that is fair to your customer, honest in its claims, and run on purpose with AI doing the heavy lifting.

Prices are signals. Build something that deserves them.

A price is a message. Read it.

A market tells you things. What people will pay, what they will not, what is scarce, what is worth making more of. A deliberate business listens to that, instead of fighting it.

Building on purpose means three things. You know what you are really selling. You charge a price you can defend to the person paying it. And you say only what is true. None of this needs a big team. With AI as your workforce, one person can now do the research, the drafting and the follow-up that used to need a department, which makes it easier to stay deliberate, not harder.

Fighting the signal

Copying rivals, guessing at prices, stretching claims to get the sale.

Listening to it

Asking the market, testing small, charging fairly and saying only what you can stand behind.

Build on purpose, or the market will build it for you.

Run every offer through these.

Do this before you launch, and again whenever you change a price or a claim. Write a plain yes or no, and a sentence of proof.

1 Value. Would the buyer, knowing everything I know, feel they got more than they paid? What is the proof?

2 Price. Can I explain this price to the customer's face in one sentence without squirming?

3 Claims. Is every promise on the page something that is true, specific and demonstrable? Strike anything that is only hope.

4 Customer. Is this person better off a month after buying, even if they never buy again?

5 Line. Is there any part of this I would not be comfortable explaining to my family, or to my own conscience? If so, change it.

Add your own checks for your field and your values. Your rules are the point. Check platform and local rules for anything regulated.

Ask the signals, do not guess.

1 THE PRICE CHECK

I sell [product or service] to [customer]. My price is [price]. Act as a skeptical but fair customer. Tell me what the price says about the value I am promising, what a buyer would compare it with, and where it might feel too high or too low. Do not flatter me. Tell me what you would want to know before paying.

2 THE CLAIMS AUDIT

Here is my sales page: [paste]. List every claim it makes. For each one, tell me if it is specific, if I can prove it, and whether it could mislead a reasonable reader. Rewrite any weak claim so that it is true and still persuasive. Do not add claims I did not make.

3 THE DEMAND READ

Here are 30 messages, reviews or questions from my customers: [paste]. Tell me the five things they most want, the three they keep misunderstanding, and one thing I could make or change that they would pay for. Quote their words. Do not invent anything.

Five roles, one person.

You do not need a team to run a deliberate business. You need clear jobs and a standard. Give each of these to AI, and keep the decisions yourself.

RESEARCHER	Reads the market for you. Competitors, reviews, what people are asking. You decide what to do with it.
DRAFTER	Writes the first version. Pages, emails, captions. You edit until it sounds like you and is true.
CHECKER	Challenges your claims and prices. The questions on page 2, run on every change.
OPERATOR	Does the repeating work. Sorting, scheduling, follow-ups, formatting.
DIRECTOR	That is you. You set the outcome and the standard, and you say yes, no or closer.

You are the conscience of the business. AI is the workforce.

Twenty minutes, every week.

1 Read the signals. Run prompt 3 on this week's messages and reviews.

2 Check one thing. Run the five honest questions on one offer, price or page. Only one, done properly.

3 Change one thing. Small, on purpose. A price, a line, an offer. Note what you changed.

4 Read it next week. Did the market move? Keep what helped, undo what did not.

WEEKLY REVIEW PROMPT

Here is what happened in my business this week: [sales, messages, changes]. Tell me what the market seems to be saying, which one thing
I should change next, and whether anything I said or charged this week could be seen as unfair or unclear. Be direct, specific and kind.
