The Content Training Plan

A four-week plan that treats your content like training, with a system that works on the days you do not feel it.

Athletes do not wait for inspiration. They follow a plan.

Train it. Do not wait for it.

Nobody who trains seriously relies on feeling like it. They have a plan, a minimum, and a way to keep going when the day goes wrong.

Content works the same way. The boring part, the showing up, always lasts longer than the exciting part. If it depends on your mood, it will stop the first time your mood does. So we build the plan once and follow it.

You do not need

Obsession, a perfect schedule, endless energy or a better camera.

You do need

A weekly session, a minimum for bad days, a log of what you did, and AI to take the heavy parts.

Reps, not results. Results are what reps leave behind.

Four weeks, one focus each.

WEEK 1 BASE	Make three posts. Rough is fine. The only goal is to prove you can make and publish on a schedule. Pick the same three days every week.
WEEK 2 VOLUME	Make five posts. Batch them in one session. You are building the habit of making in a block, not the habit of making well.
WEEK 3 SKILL	Make five, and improve one thing. Choose it from the list: hook, pacing, ending. Work only on that. Ignore the rest.
WEEK 4 GAME	Make five, and review. Look back at all fourteen. Keep what worked. Cut what did not. Write next month's plan from this month's log.

Not enough time? Halve every number. The shape matters more than the size.

A plan that survives a bad week beats a perfect one that does not.

One training session a week.

Put it in the calendar. Treat it like a gym slot. You show up whether you feel ready or not.

1 Warm up, ten minutes. Open your ideas list. Choose today's topics. Paste them into AI with the prompt below.

2 Main set, forty minutes. Record everything in one go. Same spot, same setup. Say each take once or twice and move on.

3 Finish, twenty minutes. Schedule the posts, write the captions with AI, and add a line to your log.

PASTE THIS TO WARM UP

These are my topics for this week: [paste]. For each one, write a short spoken outline: a first line that opens with the problem, three quick points, and one closing line. Plain spoken English. Under 60 seconds each. Do not add facts I did not give you.

Training rule: finish the session even if it is rough. A rough session still counts as a rep.

The minimum, for the days you cannot.

Every athlete has a version of the day for when things go wrong. This is yours.

The minimum rep

One idea. One take. One post. Ten minutes. Nothing else is required. Do this and the streak holds.

PROMPT FOR A BAD DAY

I am tired and I have one idea: [paste]. Do not give me options. Give me a hook and three short lines I can say in one take, under 45 seconds, plain spoken English. Then write the caption in two lines.

When the plan slips

1. Missed a session? Do not double up. Pick up at the next scheduled one.

2. Missed a week? Restart at the minimum rep and build back over two weeks.

The reps log.

Copy this into a note. One line per session. It takes a minute and it is how you will know it is working.

```
Date | Posts made | Minimum rep? | One thing that worked | One thing to try
_____ | ____ | Y / N | _____ | _____
_____ | ____ | Y / N | _____ | _____
_____ | ____ | Y / N | _____ | _____
_____ | ____ | Y / N | _____ | _____

Month review prompt

PASTE AT THE END OF WEEK 4

Here is my reps log for the month: [paste]. Tell me three patterns you notice, one thing to stop, one thing to keep, and a four-week plan for next month in the same shape as this one.

Not medical advice. This is a working method for building a habit and sits alongside whatever support you already use.

You do not need to be obsessed. You need a plan that keeps going.
